UNVEILED. The new electricaly controlled timepiece had its wraps removed just prior to installation on the Warren National Bank building on Thursday, March 31.

The clock after being placed will mark the rapid transit of time for those who pass the intersection of Second ave. and Liberty st. "Time and tide waits for no man" but this timer was still waiting patiently for the current to be turned on early this week.

HATCHED. Somewhat like the appearance of an Easter chick, has been the emergence of the Warren Bank and Trust Co. branch office at North Warren. The canvas covering which protected the workmen from the chilly blasts of winter has been removed revealing the extent to which the construction has been completed. Soon the facilities of the financial institution will be available to North Warren area citizens in their own backyard.

WEATHER AT A GLANCE. The fifth grade students at Home street school, under the direction of Miss Dorothy Lincoln, have been studying weather and as a result have erected this bulletin board chart which is changed every morning for the benefit of the elementary students. The little girl to the right is appropriately clothed in snow suit, raincoat or other apparel as the temperature might dictate. The round spot to the left indicates the sun which shone last Thursday. On other days an umbrella or snow flakes reveal the atmospheric conditions. The youngsters keep a close watch on the wind speed, the barometer, and the thermometer.

DEEP KNEE BENDS were required by the officials, Monday night, when they tossed for jump balls in the finals of the Gra-Y play-off. Jefferson edged South, 30 to 29.

ON DISPLAY in the Warren National Bank window is the President's Flag from the USS Missouri given to the Warren American Legion by Rear Admiral Robert L. Dennison. This is the flag that was flown September 2, 1947, off Rio de Janeiro, at a reception for President Truman on the second anniversary of the signing of the Japanese surrender, which took place on board the Missouri.

AT THIS POINT, 2890 ft. west of Mohawk ave., an approaching locomotive would break the circuit and place the warning signals into operation. A forty second warning would be given by a train traveling fifty miles per hour. The amount of warning would increase with slower freights. The activated rails are completely insulated from the connecting pieces — in the above picture at the point indicated by the arrow. On sidings, particularly, a yellow mark is painted to signal the train crew when they have cleared the circuit area and can safely brake the train without setting off the signals and needlessly warning the motorists.

By way of contrast, the warning for Main ave. is 1330 ft. west of the crossing which will give a thirty second warning at 30 m.p.h. This crossing is within the railroad's 30 mile speed zone and, therefore, a shorter warning period is required.

DEPENDABLE DEVICES DETER DRIVERS

PROTECTION BY THE CASE. R. L. Schumann and H. W. Simpson, (left and right) maintenance employees of Pennsylvania Railroad, reveal the relays located adjacent to Mohawk ave., south side, Warren, which control the blinking lights at neighboring crossings. A complete circuit from each track to a relay, powered by electricity from the regular lines, is broken when "shorted out" by an approaching train. The relay is activated which causes the lights to blink. Directional relays are employed which reinstate the circuit after the train has cleared the crossing.

If the electric power should fail, the entire operation is immediately and automatically transferred to DC which is supplied by storage batteries located in a nearby box the corner of which is visible in the above picture.

Protection is assured because any type of rail or power trouble will immediately show indications which are unmistakable to railroad employees. A power failure will turn out a light visible on top of the relay box and any disruption will immediately start the lights blinking their ominous warnings.

TONS OF STEEL are diverted by these small levers to the particular directions as indicated by pre-arranged schedules and controlled by the man in the tower — in this case, K. J. Peterson, block operator, who was relieving the regular attender. When you are traveling on Mohawk ave. toward Pleasant township you must cross two sets of tracks, these levers determine whether the approaching train will be at the first or second crossing. When Mr. Peterson pulls the lever, the train will be sent onto the northbound track and a closed signal will be given the eastern track which will shut off the blinkers at the crossing even though the warning circuit has already been passed. When the blinkers are in operation, a light appears in the tower which is one check for trouble if no train is breaking the circuit.

Mr. Simpson, who has the responsibility of examining and maintaining all the signaling devices between Erie and Kane, requests that the public respect the blinkers. Never cross a track without looking even though you are convinced that the railroad provides the best of protective equipment.

MOON'S TESTIMONY TO BE INCLUDED. Frank P. Lawley, Jr., and Harrington Adams, deputy attorney generals for the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, (left and right) were present on Wednesday to argue points of law before Presiding Judge Alexander C. Flick, Jr.

Norman Moon was convicted last May of the murder of Judge Allison D. Wade.

The judge upheld the Commonwealth's contention that Norman Moon's direct and cross examination testimony should be included in the evidence presented to the supreme court in the defendant's appeal to Judge Flick's ruling relative to the sanity commission's report. The judge held that the defendant's position, whether or not he is now sane, would not be influenced by his testimony at the time of the trial. He ordered the testimony included, however, as he ruled the appeal was directed toward the court's opinion which referred to the defendant's testimony.

A motion was presented by Mr. Lawley requesting that a ruling of supersedeas be stricken from the record which will be reviewed by the supreme court. It was the Commonwealth's belief that any motion for a new trial should be entered immediately rather than be contingent upon the supreme court's ruling on the defendant's appeal to the court's decision on the sanity commission's report. The judge denied the motion and, thereby, held the case in abeyance until after the state's highest tribunal rules on the defendant's appeal.

Arbor Day is a good time to reaffirm the wisdom behind the delicate balance that exists between all living things which we call, "The Balance of Nature". Every tree we plant helps to restore this delicate balance between the soil, the watershed and the wildlife, which has been so badly disturbed by three centuries of empire building in America.

Dirty Neighbors

Who is it that messes up our countryside with their garbage and filth? Driving in many directions through the valleys of this area you soon come to places where motorists are tossing their trash, an unhappy practice which results in unsightly scenes, and certainly can not be conducive to good health.

We have been told that there are public officials who believe the condition has gone too far and are preparing to take action. This may consist of a two-bladed attack, one attempting to cooperatively develop ways of providing systematically operated areas for disposal where service is not available and the other applying the law to violators.

There is one community in this section which had no garbage disposal service. The firemen have assumed the responsibility of bulldozing a trench in a spot easily accessible but sheltered from the community and highway. When the trench becomes filled the firemen cover it and dig out another. It now is a clean town. Also a healthy one.

Less Beaver Coats

If the ladies of the nation are dependent on the beaver caught in Northwestern Pennsylvania for their beaver coats there will be less of them worn this year. These ten counties produced 938 pelts, over a hundred less than the 1064 of 1954.

The biggest catch was 407 in Crawford county where marsh land and much water area gave the trappers a rich supply. Erie county was next with 153, and Warren was third with 132. Little Forest was fourth with 107. Then came Mercer, 52; Venango, 42; Jefferson, 26; Clarion, 14, and Butler, 5.

But the quality was good and the average size was larger than last year. Several weighed over sixty pounds and one forced the scales to sixty-seven. The game commissioners say there is plenty of stock left to provide good trapping next year, the season for which will be named at the July meeting.

* * *

Bucks For Deer

An average of a little over a dollar was obtained by the game commission for each of 2,198 deer hides which were obtained last fall. These were the hides of illegal kills, highway casualties, and those turned in by hunters. The total take was $2,714.75. You can add to that the fines.

Watch Those Wires

Something we don't give much thought to while considering the dangers of the outdoors is the low-hanging electric wire. Though utility companies do a good job of hanging their wires at safe heights, trucks some times get overloaded, or wires sag as the result of a break or a leaning pole.

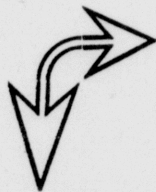

If you happen to be aboard a truck which gets hooked up with a sagging wire, the wisest thing you can do is to stay aboard until you or someone unattached works the wire loose. The rubber tires have provided insulation and the electricity is going nowhere. But when you place one foot on the ground...you're it!

And if you are a rider on top of a high load, watch for the wires. If you ever have run into a clothesline in the dark you have a faint idea of what can erupt. If you don't get shocked you will get roped and thrown.

If you find a sagging wire, leave it alone. If there are two of you, leave one on guard while the other makes a report. Don't think that you can touch a single wire and get away with it. This is especially untrue of high voltage wires.

As L. C. Meyer, who writes warnings of this kind, says, the rattle snake warns you, but the power line has no voice. Keep a safe distance.

UNSIGHTLY AND UNHEALTHY. Too many dumps like these are to be found along our highways in this area. There must be some authority which controls such abuse of land, despoiling the property and endangering health. Not only is there such authority, but we are told that some officials are considering positive action.

Warren County Road Surfacing

Warren county will receive far more than the average amount of road surfacing this summer. The State Highway department has announced that it will surface treat with bituminous material about sixty-six miles of highways in Warren county at an approximate cost of $80,390. Forest county's hard tops will have $22,695 spent on about seventeen miles.

The biggest resurfacing job will be in Somerset where it will top one hundred miles. Lancaster with ninety and Erie with 86 are next. Warren is about on a par with Crawford, Venango, and Mercer.

H Bomb Advice

One million leaflets which tell facts about the H bomb and propose actions you can take will be distributed through civil defense agencies, schools, churches, industries, and other channels. This, of course, will not touch the total population, and you can have yourself a supply by writing to the Superintendent of Documents, U. S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C. The price is $2.75 for 100.

According to this leaflet we are subject to attack any minute and should have our homes constantly prepared. This would include a civil defense first aid kit, and knowledge concerning its proper use, practice fire-safe housekeeping (in short, clean the place up), learn how to fight small fires, maintain a three-day emergency supply of food and water at all times, equip the most protected place you can find for an air raid shelter, and know how to practice emergency sanitation.

Even this one paragraph suggests that all of us have much to learn and we are slow to act because we cannot believe that war is so close. Maybe it isn't, but we are being told to be prepared.

Another Kudo For State Hosp.

The approval of the Warren state hospital for three-year residency training, the highest rating granted, ranks it among about one-eighth of the 200 state hospitals. Only twenty-five have such a classification.

The proficiency of the training program at the Warren State hospital is seen in the long line of distinguished psychiatrists who have served there in the past, under both the late Dr. Harry Mitchell and Dr. Robert H. Israel. They include such men as Dr. Hilding Bengs, now Pennsylvania's commissioner of mental health; Dr. O. W. Clinger, Dr. William Schilling, Dr. Hamblen Eaton, Dr. John Urbatis, Dr. Leonard Kosen-sweig, and Dr. Howard Petrie, all of whom have moved on to superintend other mental hospitals.

Tridico Nominated

Jim Tridico who has served as acting fire chief for the Warren fire department since the retirement of Charles Albaugh, may become the official chief if the civil service commission approves him. The Warren borough council at a special meeting Tuesday nominated Mr. Tridico.

If the civil service commission approves him, council still will have to vote formally on the promotion. If this does not happen there is a question concerning the future status of Mr. Tridico.

The fire department now has three captains, and the firemen's union, which represents a portion of the Warren hosemen, is reported to be taking action against such a situation. This dates back to the year when Captain Willey was not named captain because he did not seek election. It later was contended and the contention upheld by the higher courts that Captain Willey should have been continued as captain because of civil service. Council reinstated Willey but did not demote Tridico.

A union action to prove Tridico is an illegal captain because he was not advanced through civil service now is anticipated. The advancement of Mr. Tridico may escape these unpleasanties. What

Does Not Cure Psoriasis

The medicinal preparation known as "Lipan" does not cure a disease of the skin known as psoriasis, says the Federal Trade Commission which has ordered the makers to stop making such claims in their ads. The preparation might afford relief from external symptoms, but is not a cure.

More Insurance Denials

Some insurance companies charged by the Federal Trade Commission with false advertising concerning what their health and hospital policies will do, have filed objections to the charges. Others have claimed they have changed their advertising practices and now are not making the extravagant claims once prevalent in such appeals. The most common answer is not a denial of the charge, but a denial that the FTC has supervision over their activities.

Some of those now answering the charge include the Girardian Insurance Co., which says it is regulated by the state of Texas and not the federal government, and that it has changed its advertising practices.

The Professional Insurance Co.,

also argues the jurisdictional point, claiming it operates in Florida. And it also argues that its printed claims are modified by the salesmen and are there only to attract attention, but at the same time argues that its advertising statements have been distorted by the FTC.

The Southern National Insurance Co., of Little Rock, Ark., has agreed in a consent order to stop making the claims on which the FTC took action. Acceptance of the order does not constitute admission of guilt but does change the company's policy of advertising.

Will Not Grow Hair

The everlasting hope of the bald and balding that a way has been found to sprout new locks on their crown again has been disproved in action against the Keratone Company which worded its ads concerning Keratone Scalp Formula No. 1 and 2 so as to raise hope in the minds of those who dream of covering their lengthening foreheads. It will not grow hair and will not prevent baldness.

Another Cookery Case

American Stainless Kitchen Co. is the latest to be charged with making false claims for its stainless steel cookery and false ones about competing aluminum products. Another so charged is Permanent Stainless Steel, Inc.

Contradicting the claims of the American Co. and similar claims made by many demonstrators of cooking utensils, the Federal Trade Commission makes the following statements which may be of great interest to all concerned with food values:

"There is some loss of vitamins and minerals from every known method of cooking. There is no difference in the results obtained, using the method of cooking recommended, when utensils other than stainless steel are used.

"Potatoes are of high caloric value when cooked by any method. If a person consumes more calories than necessary for the body, it is fattening.

"Cooking odors don't mean loss in food value and these odors are not produced by vitamins and minerals.

"Calcium, sodium, phosphorus, iodine, manganese, iron, chlorine, silicon, sulphur, magnesium, fluorine, potassium, oxygen, nitrogen, hydrogen, and carbon are not partially destroyed when food is boiled. Some are soluble in water but they are not lost unless the water is discarded. Silicon is not essential for human nutrition and health.

"Most ailments are not due to the lack of any element in the diet and these elements in food are not destroyed by any method of cooking.

"Calcium does not protect against tuberculosis; sodium against gallstones, lowered energy or acidity; phosphorus against impaired eyesight, nervous disorders or a dull mind; manganese against a confused mind or weak tissues; or iodine against wrinkled skin.

"In addition, the complaint maintains that contrary to claims made, chlorine does not protect the gums against pyorrhea or the body against blood or liver trouble. Silicon is not a teeth decay preventative and will not prevent baldness. Sulphur is not a protection against poor digestion, blood or skin disease and magnesium in the form found in plants is not a laxative.

"Continuing, the complaint states that contrary to the firm's representations, magnesium does not protect against stiff joints or muscles and there is no such thing as a deficiency of magnesium caused by improper preparation of vegetables.

"Fluorine does not protect against tuberculosis, weak eyes or bladder trouble; nitrogen against weak tissues; potassium against constipation; oxygen against lowered vitality; hydrogen against poor circulation, congestion or inflammation; and carbon against body heat or lack of energy."

fictitious high prices on its watches. The watches then are retailed for lower prices with the customer convinced that he is getting a buy. For example, some watches bearing a price tag of $71.50 are sold for $22.95. The retailer does this with full knowledge of the company, which provides the tag for such deception.

Lee's

"All-American" hat$7.50 (black label)

An easy way to stand out hat and shoulders above the crowd! The "All-American's" sweeping brim and narrow band make the most of your good looks. And the pre-shaped crown means this Lee, like many others, will keep its good looks. Comfort weight. In long, wide or regular ovals.

Don't take less than the best... don't take less than a Lee!

Get Out The Brush

A bit of bright green should be busting forth on those mountain-sides most any day now, and there will come a day when you can catch the mixture of new green, busting red buds, and a bit of brown background for a splash or two on the canvas

Once turned out you can enter the work in the annual Talent Recognition Art Show, of the Warren Woman's Club. This show is for Warren county artists, who do not paint to sell. You can enter two paintings, drawings, or whatever your specialty, and the size is not limited. They must be mounted so that they may be hung.

The show is set for May 19, 20, and 21, in the Woman's Club, and you can obtain an entry blank any time now. There must be a blank with each entry. Entries must be brought to the Club on May 15, between five and six in the evening, or May 16 between one and six. This allows time for arranging and judging. Give your picture a title.

This is strictly an amateur event, so do not hesitate to take part just because you are new at the hobby. It will be good experience and might pleasantly surprise you.

College students who are home for Easter vacation are urged to obtain entry blanks right now and to make arrangements for participating. Mrs. W. N. Hutchings, chairman of the event, has made this possible so that those away from home, but residents of the county, may contribute to the field.

Last year a college student, Clyde C. Smith, swept the show, his Daisies taking the blue ribbon and his Character Study meeting the approval of the public. His The Firstniter also copped honorable mention

One bit of difference this year will be the omission of a photographic division. However, the ceramics still are a part of the show.

What To Do

The lack of a photographic division in the art talent show leaves the focus and snap boys with no place to go. Perhaps the club which once functioned along these lines, and may still do so in an unpublicized manner, could find this a rallying point. A real photography show could be promoted if those vitally interested in the hobby would put their minds to it. The value is obvious.

Perhaps this is one for the picture conscious Observer to encourage. There could be many classifications, and the proper titling would provide much information for others. We must think that one over. If some enthusiastic group is willing to give us a hand we might work something out.

Speaking Of Pics

If you are interested in press photography you can pick up some real help from the experts with two days of pleasure and at a cost of only $35. The Syracuse school of journalism, along with the New York press and publishers association, and the regional press association, will sponsor a two-day short course in photo journalism on April 11 and 12. Some of the best will be on hand to teach and demonstrate.

The $35 includes lunch on Monday and Tuesday, breakfast on Tuesday, banquet on Tuesday, housing on Monday night, a 100-print press photography exhibit, and two solid days of instructions by the big operators in the business. Just write Syracuse University.

Another Workshop

Then there is a workshop for writers, to be held at Chautauqua, this summer, starting July 11 and lasting three weeks. This is for the established writer, the beginner, and the amateur. Heading the staff will be Digory Venn, a free lance writer and associated with a prominent publishing house. There will be novelists, poets, children book authors, and a wide variety of help. Many laymen attend this annual school just to listen to the discussions in hopes of sharpening their perception of what good writing should be.

Collect Matchcovers?

If you collect matchcovers for a hobby you are eligible for a shindig that will be staged April 23 and 24 in the Blue Mountain Hotel, five miles north of Harrisburg, sponsored by the Keystone Matchcover Club. This is the third annual spring frolic, and you don't have to belong to an organized group to be eligible. You just have to be a collector.

For details you can write Ray Yeingst, 502 Parkway Road, Room 1, Harrisburg, Pa. Wonder if that hotel has a flame room?

Observations

By EdL Walsh

We have been told that we recently let the prospective young journalists of the county down by not accepting an invitation to speak at a career conference which was held in Warren and was attended by boys and girls from all corners of the county. We would be a little egoistic to agree, but if there is a shade of truth in such an accusation we must explain that the event was held on an impossible evening for us.

We are very much interested in the young people who are considering journalism as their possible career. So interested that we have employed many of them and have given them opportunities to practice this work while attending both high school and college. Among them we have found some exceptional talent, much of which was given a good start by Warren high school instruction.

We are very happy and very willing to discuss journalism with any boy or girl who wishes to call us for an appointment. Or if they want to take a chance on our not being busy, they can drop in at 333 Hickory and maybe they will catch us between a hop and a skip or a skip and a jump.

Unfortunately for us, the most promising candidates for this work are not long with us. Most of them go on to college. This is as it should be and we recommend a similar course for any of you who entertain journalism hopes.

Though it is a business in which a college diploma is not required, there is little doubt that the qualified young man or woman who would make a good reporter through no more preparation than high school and experience on the job, would be an even better reporter if he or she had four years of training in a good journalism school.

If you are going to waste your college years, it might be better to get a job on a newspaper and have it crammed into you the hard way, but if you will make the most of the advantages of college, it will pay major dividends.

If a half dozen applicants were seeking a position under us, and if we could find among them one possessing both experience and a diploma from such colleges as Northwestern or Columbia, that one would rate at the head of the list, providing character, personality and other qualities measured up to par.

Too often young people point to some man as proof that you need not attend school to be a success. But they do not see the grinding years, the extra work, the rough times, the slim pay checks, the night time study, the suffering that comes through learning by error, and the long, long drag to success that might have come much easier if that same man had enjoyed the help of four years in a top-notch journalism school. He also probably enjoyed some very opportune breaks.

Too many reporters still are on the high school level, both in their thinking and in their writing proficiency. They have learned to spell a few words, pound out a few phrases, and throw together a news story, but they have bumped their heads on a low ceiling, a ceiling they never will bust through because of their limited scope.

Good Minds Needed

The press needs good minds today. The best among us is none too good. The fight for free press is a continuing one. It is a freedom that has not been long with us, and is far from completed. We have gone into this aspect before in this column, but the battle goes on every day for those newsmen with vision and a conscience. You find too few of them in a work that is so vital to man's advancement in this world; that challenges all who would speak out with the truth on their lips and at their fingertips.

Knowledge of history, familiarity with press law, a background of literary and linguistic knowledge, familiarity with economic and social problems and theories. All these and more are a major help in such work. They come much easier when they are taught by those who have the ability to educate. It is difficult to piece them together on your own and through trial and error.

There is good money paid in this field, but it is at the top. The run of the field reporters are not driving Packards, playing golf at the country club, or living in thirty thousand dollar homes. That is for the professional men, the engineers, the chemists, the smart business operators.

Accept journalism as a service to others, as a crusade for freedom, as duty to the betterment of man, and you may find happiness, though often a partial happiness somewhat choked by frustration. And so devoted, many are surprised to find that the good work pays off and the reward of promotion is theirs. Especially is this so on the few top grade papers found among us.

If you are looking for the advantages of being with the press, it is here. But behind that big shot front, earning that movie story illusion of yourself, is much unglamorous, routine work, which soon brings the practical cub tumbling from his cloud and either changes his mind about the vocation he wants to follow or sends him digging for the training he must have to make the grade.

Fortunate is the young reporter who finds an editor who has both the ability and the willingness to train those working for him. The average cub is treated as such and will encounter jealousy, prejudice, and a reluctance to help, quite prevalent among many editorial staffs. He will be helped only so far as his assistance is needed to clean up the routine work, and not so far as to place him on a level with those ahead of him. He will have to scratch for vocabulary, civic savvy, and his own contacts.

Helpful Qualifications

The well equipped and successful reporter today is neatly dressed, sells himself to the public equally as well as a Class A clerk, knows his city, county, state, national, and world, remembers his history, names, and faces, has reviewed the stories of the past so that he will recognize a current tie-in, knows a little bit about everything, or where to look for it, can take pictures, finds writing easy, knows where the law touches his work, is not trite, can write headlines and edit wire news.

He must have inquisitiveness and finesse. He must know a major story when he sees it, but must have sufficient conscience to be able to swallow that story even if it means his job.

At the same time he must realize that he cannot be a newspaper man and play god. News is news. There must be no favorites.

It requires knowledge, courage, poise, and a humble faith in oneself that is exceeded only by a greater faith in Him whose word you hope somehow will find its way into what you think, what you feel, and what comes out on that sheet of paper which rolls from your typewriter.

The fact is that there are many of us who want to be journalists. Obviously we still have a long way to go.

Dissenter May Protect Your Gas Bill

By Thomas L. Stokes

WASHINGTON -- The life of the dissenter is often a lonely one.

That goes especially for the dissenter in politics and government. For government, and also politics, is the art of compromise and the non-compromiser is not popular with his colleagues who are "practical fellows who play the game," as they might describe themselves.

But the dissenter often serves a most useful purpose by illuminating the whole course and atmosphere of government at some particular time.

That is illustrated graphically just now in a case being aired in Congress involving an important regulatory commission, the Federal Power Commission. But, before coming to that, let us go back some years to show how history keeps repeating itself as to dissenters and what they reveal about who controls government.

This, with apologies for a personal experience, takes us back to a young reporter who in the early 1920's, after the advent of the Harding Republican Administration, was sent to interview a member and former chairman of the Federal Trade Commission about a situation which some newspapers were interested in having investigated. The Federal Trade Commission had been created a few years before, early in the previous Woodrow Wilson Democratic Administration, to stamp out unfair trade practices and prevent the growth of monopoly.

The member interviewed, a left-over Democrat who had been appointed by President Wilson, explained why he could get nothing done about the situation in which the newspapers were interested. The commission, he explained, had been "packed" and he had been outvoted 4 to 1 when he brought the matter up, as he was consistently outvoted, 4 to 1, on every issue of a similar nature. He was a frustrated champion of the public interest.

The commission was dozing away into a state of "innocuous desuetude" -- to borrow a phrase from Grover Cleveland to describe what was happening in the era of Harding "normalcy" in which big business and finance had government well under control.

This was a valuable lesson in government, never forgotten, and particularly in the field of commission government. Depending upon the caliber of their membership, regulatory commissions can effectively carry out laws which they are delegated by Congress to enforce and administer -- or they can in effect nullify laws which Congress enacted to protect the public interest.

Here, 30 years later, history rolls around to another era of "packed" commissions.

There are many examples, including once again the Federal Trade Commission. But there is one of special interest now because it is in the middle of a big fight getting under way in Congress. This is the Federal Power Commission that was created in 1930, in the Herbert Hoover Administration, to regulate hydro-electric power and, in 1938, was delegated by Congress also to regulate natural gas.

The FPC is now well "packed" -- from top to bottom. But, like the Federal Trade Commission of 30 years ago, it has its dissenter in the case which is now attracting national attention because it affects the 40-odd million natural gas consumers in the nation.

Interestingly enough, this dissenter, Commissioner Claude L. Draper, was appointed by President Herbert Hoover when the commission was created in 1930, and has been for many years the only remaining member of the original commission. He is a Republican from Wyoming.

As for the case, you will recall it is outside the Defense Department.

Against this background it is probably academic to point to the glaring inconsistencies between the two transportation projects, since so little is apt to happen. For example, truckers were raised to seventh heaven by the prospect of billions of dollars worth of new roads, but were sent plummeting in the opposite direction by a recommendation in the Weeks report that railway companies should be freed to go into the trucking and bus business.

What seems to be happening is that people deeply interested in certain fields are being allowed to shape White House policy dealing with them, without that leavening of the general interest which politicians are supposed to supply. It is one result of a cabinet of business men who are trained to look after a relatively few interests very well.

When these recommendations or programs reach Congress, the politicians quickly detect their imbalance. If a large and well balanced schedule of legislation were before them, members of Congress would not perhaps be so chary. Instead they have had only a sprinkling of special messages.

This is one reason there will be very little new substantive legislation this year. The story may be different in 1956 -- an election year.

The public result is an appearance of political moderation. White House moves such as the Weeks proposals which would really change established policy are quickly rebuffed on the Hill. In turn, Congress is warned not to expand present horizons while the budget remains unbalanced.

It is probably that what Senator Kefauver said on the floor last week is true. It is that the American people are in the mood to pause and catch their breath, which is a big reason for the President's appeal.

Balmy Training Days

Recent days have not been too bad for the boys who soon must carry Blue and White colors for Warren around those area cinder paths. This year the Warren boys will try to keep a victory string running that started late last spring.

Undefeated in twenty straight meets the Dragons lost in a quadrangular meet by three points to Smethport. It beat Oil City once but was edged by two points on a trip to that city. It then whipped Jamestown and Meadville to get back on the trail.

The opening meet will be April 19, at Corry, with Youngsville as the third party.

Jefferson Wins Crown

Our hearing gradually is returning. The trouble started Monday night when some one tipped us off by phone that there would be some real action on the Y court and we better get us a camera and squeeze in. We did!

Jefferson was playing South st. in the finals of the Gra-Y basketball league and the balcony was lined with rooters, said screaming lot being a combination of fellow students, teachers, and parents. The rafters flinched, the balcony sagged, and the future of Warren high school enthusiasm was assured.

Jefferson won it, despite a last second basket by South, and went home doing handsprings over the 30 to 29 verdict. Jefferson won it by virtue of some of the fanciest dribbling we ever have watched. The dribbling was done by South, which had several boys who used up precious time with fancy exhibitions that had us gaping but didn't get anyone near the basket.

The Southerners seemed most aggressive and had the ball a big share of the time. If it had been wrestling they would have been given the nod because of their time advantage. But in this game the scoreboard clicks only when the loop is speared. Jefferson did enough of that to win.

Frantz had 9, Zaffino, 9, and Wilson, 8, for the winners. Seder hit 11 and Schneider, 10, for South.

Tournament Bowling

We haven't seen an official report on the Warren Bowling Association's tournament, but we understand that Nummy Wooster took the singles with 680 plus a 28 handicap for 708.

Warren lady bowlers did fairly well in the Frewsburg tournament Friday when the first group took over a shift. Rose Juliano and Konky Tridico took over second place with 1024 in the doubles. Jaye Pappalardo had 538 in the singles which was good for fourth. The tournament continues most of this month, with several more Warren squads having a try at it.

FASTER DELIVERY for mail in the Pittsburgh area and destinations west of Cleveland was assured by the employment of Lyon Transportation Co. trucks to make daily trips to the "Smokey City". The big transports will leave the

Warren post office at 7:30 p. m. and arrive before 2 a. m., six hours before the same mail could have left from Pennsylvania station, guaranteeing next-day delivery for Allegheny county and a saving of 24 to 48 hours on western distributions. These large trucks will carry approximately 500 bags of mail each and, as in the case of the railroads, are contracted for monthly on a space basis.

The Trojan War

"Omnibus" deserves some sort of medal for valor for attempting "The Iliad" by Homer in the first place and another medal for having got away with it as well as they did on a live production. That does not mean that it was an unqualified success, because it wasn't.

It just wasn't in the cards that it could be. Actually, of the two great Homeric poems, the most ancient epics of the western world, "The Odyssey" would probably be a lot easier. "The Iliad" is fundamentally a story of battle and of warfare. The "Omnibus" people staffed their "Iliad" with fifty actors, which is a lot of actors by TV standards but not nearly enough. The poem demands a cast of thousands and Cinemascope and Cecil B. DeMille to do it justice.

* * *

As it came out it was a little epic which is a contradiction in terms. This criticism applied not only to the general size of the production but to everything else about it. Phyllis Hill, for example, who played Helen, is a lovely girl with a face which, I calculate, could launch maybe 200 ships but not, I think, 1,000.

Paul Sparrer, who played Achilles, the Greek's greatest warrior, has neither the personality nor the size of a man of such heroic proportions.

This same absence of epic proportions applies, I'm afraid, to the prose of Andrew K. Lewis who adapted the poem. The dialogue occasionally got rather alarmingly colloquial. "Rest easy," said Zeus, one character declared, and any moment I expected Achilles to burst out with "Oh, Nuts." "The Iliad" being quite a lengthy tale, Mr. Lewis had to prune quite a lot out of it, and one thing he pruned out almost entirely was the participation of the gods which seems rather a shame.

The abduction of Helen not only set two great powers at each other's throats but rent the heavens asunder, the gods and goddesses lining up about equally on the sides of the Trojans and the Greeks. Frequently, they came right down off Olympus and gave physical battle, and this I'd liked to have seen, though I admit the problem of casting people like Apollo and Athena wouldn't have been easy. But the absence of the gods — beyond an occasional glimpse of an arm — was just one other thing that brought this version of "The Iliad" down to human rather than epic scale.

On this level, though, it was a remarkably interesting (and only occasionally ludicrous) hour and a half of television. The "Omnibus" crowd hasn't much space to work in and still managed to give the illusion of a walled city and a great plain set by a great sea. Actors always make me nervous when they get to playing with swords — I keep worrying they'll cut themselves — but these actors managed to bang away at each other with a degree of conviction. There was also some marvelously coordinated camerawork in the crowd scenes.

Lewis began his version with Achilles sulking in his tent because Agamemnon had run off with his girl friend, Briseis, and while the corpses piled up all over the place, proceeded to the slaying of the great Trojan warrior Hector by Achilles. It ended, as does "The Iliad" itself, with King Priam bringing the body of his son Hector back to Troy for the funeral. Just preceding it was the most moving scene of the production — the aged King Priam, on his knees, begging for the return of his son's body. There should have been more scenes of this power.

As Priam, I thought Frederick Rolf was every inch a king. Michael Higgins as Hector wore his armor as if he wore that sort of thing every day and was easily

Big Business Fights In White House

By Doris Fleenon

WASHINGTON -- The Wall Street Journal has published the Eisenhower Administration's still secret transportation report. It is heavily weighted in favor of the railroads and railroad stocks have been climbing, presumably in a case of cause and effect.

The verdict of an experienced politician who has read the report is less bullish. Naming various aggressive industries it will vitally affect, including truckers and the airlines, he suggested that if the President backed it, every lawyer in America would be put on retainer by some interested party.

Apparently practical politicians who like Ike have achieved contact with the White House. The report is still secret and Secretary of Commerce Weeks, its guiding genius, has announced a European journey in the interest of more foreign trade.

The other transportation project of the Administration -- the President's $101 billion highway program -- has already bit the dust. Fiscal conservatives including Senator Byrd protested its off-the-budget financing aspects. The loose Federal-state partnership proposed came under fire from liberals, while various state Governors attacked the toll road sections.

Chairman Gore of the Senate Public Works Committee had already filed it in the wastebasket before the President's new Controller-General, Joseph Campbell, appeared with his own large funeral wreath. The vehemence of Campbell's attack almost persuaded Gore he had been wrong in fighting that appointment.

Gore now intends to push his own bill which began by doubling the present program and may now be pushed up to four or five billions -- he hopes. In this particular Congress, that would be a substantial appropriation for new construction that a few months ago the Supreme Court held that, under the 1938 Natural Gas Act, the FPC is required to regulate producers of natural gas at the well-head. Numerous bills were introduced in Congress to nullify that decision and exempt the producers. When hearings began recently before the House Interstate Commerce Committee on these bills, four of the five members of the FPC joined in supporting one by Rep. Oren Harris (D., Va.) that would relieve the commission from regulating producers.

From this, Commissioner Draper dissented. He contended that the Harris bill would not protect consumers. Instead he endorsed another measure, sponsored by Rep. John W. Heselton (R., Mass.). This would exempt the small producers, who constitute about 80 per cent in number of the 4,000 producers though they produce only about 10 per cent of natural gas, but would continue regulation for the big producers, chiefly giant oil companies, which produce about 90 per cent of the natural gas flowing in interstate commerce. BETTER BIRD HOUSING was the result of the efforts forwarded by the Cubs of Home Street School Pack 47 — each boy built a bird house. All shapes and sizes bear evidences of originality of the carpenters or their den mothers.

ALL TYPES OF CONVEYANCES were employed by students of McClintock school as they brought old newspapers and magazines in a fund raising effort. Semi-annually, the youngsters bring in the paper and the profits are placed in the activities fund from which such items as a portable radio and playground equipment has been purchased. In this particular collection, the Cubs cooperated and the income will be divided.

DEMONSTRATORS Larry Whitten, Bill Sedwick, Jim Rolin, and Jim Redding revealed the proper techniques involved in signalling and camp making. During the evening, Thursday, March 31, a new den, with Walt Peterson as dad, was organized for Webelos in Pack 47 — the first of its type in Chief Cornplanter Council. The members are Jim Ronan, John Hibner, George Kelsey, and Dan Dorsey.
